Beneath the Storm

by Lunaeryi

Summary

Mydei seemed to sense it too. His eyes darkened, his hand slowly coming up to touch the side of Phainon's face, his thumb brushing lightly over his jaw. The touch was so gentle it almost didn't feel real, like a dream slipping through his fingers, but it was real. And it sent a shiver down Phainon's spine.

"I think," Mydei murmured, his voice thick with something darker now, "that you've been holding back far too long."

OR in which Mydei And Phainon hide out in a temple, talk about their feelings, and proceed to have temple sex!

The clash of steel and hiss of fire filled the air as Phainon and Mydei fought their way through the dense fogs of Januspolis. The Followers of Strife were relentless in their pursuit, their chaotic energy cackling like thunder as madness overtook them.

Suppressing a wince, Phainon struck them down one by one, moving on instinct alone—his thoughts drowned out in the midst of the battle while dispatching any of the titankin who'd gotten a tad too close.

On the contrary, Mydei seemed to be doing much better, the hours of assaults seemingly only fueling the man's resolve as adrenaline coursed through his veins. But the strain was starting to show—Mydei's movement, while precise, was growing noticeably more sloppy by the minute.

As if sensing his fatigue, Mydei abruptly changed his stance, mercilessly striking down an enemy who'd managed to sneak behind him before he had the time to react,"Getting tired, Deliverer?" Mydei taunted, his voice laced with a hint of challenge.

A breathless laugh left Phainon's lips as he retorted, "Of course not. In fact, I've only just begun, Mydei. You'll find out I don't tire so easily."

At that the prince scoffed, but with after a brief exchange of knowing glances, they'd both fell into a familiar rhythm, fighting side by side like a well rehearsed dance.

Phainon's blade carved through the air with deadly accuracy, and as he made another precise cut, Mydei was already there, sweeping in to dispatch a foe who had tried to take advantage of Phainon's opening. Without a word, they shifted positions—Phainon taking the front, Mydei darting to the side to cover him. Every move felt instinctive, their silent understanding of each other blossoming in moments like this.

When Mydei ducked under a brutal swing, Phainon was right there, parrying the blow before it could land. Mydei's free hand shot forward, grabbing the enemy by the wrist and twisting it with practiced precision, sending the soldier crashing to the ground. Their movements were seamless, a perfect balance of offense and defense, as if they had become extensions of each other in the heat of battle.

Alas, even they couldn't hold out forever. The onslaught was relentless, their enemies closing in from all sides like a tightening noose. "Keep moving!" Mydei barked, his voice sharp and commanding as he delivered a brutal strike to an opponent's neck. The sickening snap that followed grated on Phainon's ears, but there was no time to dwell on it.

They were being overwhelmed, even with their best effort they were still faltering under the sheer number of foes pressing in.

"Mydei we can't hold on any longer!" Phainon all but yelled, to which Mydei didn't respond to, busy cleaving through the titankin who just kept on coming.

" They're regrouping—don't let them box us in!" Mydei's voice was as sharp as his strikes, though Phainon caught the slight strain beneath his usual confidence.

Now it was Phainon's turn not to respond. He was too focused on the path ahead, his gaze catching on a shadowed structure partially obscured by vines and rubble—a temple, ancient and untouched by time. It was their only chance.

"There!" He shouted over his shoulder, jerking his head toward the structure. Mydei glanced up, his expression hardening.

"A dead end? That's your plan?"

"It's shelter!" Phainon shot back, already making a run for the temple's crumbling steps

With a frustrated growl, Mydei followed, hurling a final burst of fire toward their pursuers before ducking inside. The heavy stone doors groaned as they slammed shut behind them, muffling the chaotic sounds of the fight outside.

Inside, the silence was almost deafening. The faint glow of strange glyphs lit the massive chamber, casting flickering light across the worn stone walls. Phainon leaned against the door, catching his breath as Mydei paced in tight, irritated circles.

“This is your idea of a strategy? Running into some cursed ruin with no way out?” Mydei snapped, his tone biting.

“You’re welcome to go back out there and face them alone,” Phainon retorted, his calm tone doing little to mask his own exhaustion.

Sighing, Phainon continued, “Tribbie should eventually realize something went wrong and send someone out for us. Now all we have to do is wait.”

Mydei scoffed, running his hand through his sweat-dampened hair as he surveyed the ancient chamber. “Wait? That’s your brilliant solution? Wait while those titankin claw their way in hoping for a rescue?” Mydei snorted, crossing his arms as he leaned against a nearby pillar. “You’d think the great Deliverer would have more than that up his sleeve.”

Phainon allowed himself a faint smile, brushing back a loose strand of hair also dampened with sweat. “I didn’t realize you were such a critic. Should I have asked you for a lecture in battlefield tactics while we were surrounded?”

Mydei raised a brow at that, his smirk deepening. “Careful, Deliverer. You’re starting to sound dangerously confident.”

For a moment, the tension shifted—no longer the sharp-edged frustration of battle but something else entirely. Phainon met Mydei’s gaze, and the air between them seemed to grow heavier, charged with an energy the temple’s glyphs couldn’t account for.

“You’d know all about confidence,” Phainon replied, his tone teasing but his gaze steady.

Mydei tilted his head slightly, stepping forward. “I’d also know when someone’s bluffing,” he said, his voice dropping to a softer, more deliberate pitch.

The silence between them grew thick, heavy with something unspoken. Mydei's words hung in the air, lingering longer than usual, and Phainon could feel the subtle shift in the atmosphere. It wasn't the familiar heat of battle, the adrenaline that made their every move feel like a matter of life and death. No, this was something else—something deeper.

Mydei's stance had relaxed, his arms uncrossed, but there was a glint in his eye now, something that hadn't been there before. A challenge, yes, but also something… more. His gaze flickered to Phainon's lips for a brief moment, before returning to his eyes. It wasn't the look of a warrior sizing up an opponent, but something far more dangerous.

"You always hide behind that calm exterior," Mydei said, his voice softer now, but no less sharp. "But I've seen glimpses of what's beneath. What are you afraid of, Phainon?"

Phainon's pulse quickened at the question, though his face remained neutral. He took a step toward Mydei, closing the distance between them with deliberate slowness, as if testing the tension. "Afraid?" he repeated, voice low. "I'm not afraid of anything."

The words felt hollow as soon as he spoke them. Because in truth, there was a part of him that was—afraid of this. Afraid of what Mydei's gaze did to him, afraid of how his heart seemed to race every time they were this close. But he wouldn't give Mydei the satisfaction of knowing that. He wouldn't let the prince see how much of an effect he had.

Mydei's smirk deepened as he stepped forward too, his body almost brushing against Phainon's as he leaned in, his breath warm against his ear. "Then prove it," he whispered, his voice a velvet temptation.

Phainon's breath hitched, a small, involuntary sound that betrayed him. His eyes flickered to Mydei's lips—so close, so damn close—and for the first time, he found himself unsure, his calm demeanor cracking. The unspoken challenge was there now, hanging in the air between them. Who would act first? Would it be him, the Deliverer, who had always controlled the situation? Or would it be Mydei, the prince who wore his arrogance like armor, daring Phainon to meet him in a way he'd never dared before?

His hand twitched at his side, almost as if reaching for something, but it wasn't a weapon. No, this was something far more dangerous.

Mydei seemed to sense it too. His eyes darkened, his hand slowly coming up to touch the side of Phainon's face, his thumb brushing lightly over his jaw. The touch was so gentle it almost didn't feel real, like a dream slipping through his fingers, but it was real. And it sent a shiver down Phainon's spine.

"I think," Mydei murmured, his voice thick with something darker now, "that you've been holding back far too long."

Phainon's heart stopped. He was dead—or surely dying—if this was truly happening. (He had imagined this hundreds of times in fleeting moments, always in the silence of his thoughts, where Mydei's teasing words were nothing more than a fantasy, a dangerous, impossible fantasy he'd buried deep inside. But now, it was real—too real.)

His breath caught in his throat, his gaze unwavering as he stared at Mydei. The air between them was electric, charged with anticipation, and for the briefest of moments, doubt flickered across Phainon's face. He took a half-step back, as if considering the consequences of what might come next. His voice, though steady, betrayed the smallest edge of hesitation.

"Are you sure about this?" Phainon asked, his tone low, his eyes searching Mydei's for some sign, some reassurance that this wasn't a mistake. The question lingered in the air, heavy and fragile.

Mydei's lips curved into a knowing smirk, his eyes unreadable as he took a step forward, closing the gap once more. The tension in the room seemed to snap as he tilted his head, his voice dripping with mock amusement.

"Are you sure, Deliverer?" Mydei countered, his words like a challenge, a mirror reflecting Phainon's own uncertainty. "You were the one so certain, remember?"

His eyes held Phainon's, daring him to back down, daring him to admit he, too, wasn't immune to what was happening, or going to happen really. Mydei's tone changed to something almost akin to teasing as he took another step forward, his proximity almost overwhelming. "I thought you were the one who didn't tire easily."

The space between them felt impossibly small now, the air charged with something neither of them had dared to acknowledge until this very moment. Mydei's words hung in the air, and for the first time, Phainon found himself unable to reply. His thoughts scattered like leaves in the wind, his body betraying him, pulling him closer to the prince despite every ounce of restraint he'd fought so hard to maintain.

For a heartbeat, everything seemed to freeze. The flickering light from the temple's strange glyphs, the distant echo of their enemies outside—all of it faded into the background. It was just the two of them now, standing in the silence of a decision made without words.

Then, as if a dam had broken loose inside him, Phainon surged forward, his body acting on instinct. His lips met Mydei's with desperate force, a clash of teeth more than lips, a collision of raw need and unspoken desires. There was no tenderness in the kiss, no hesitation—only a frenzy that neither could deny any longer.

Phainon's hands were everywhere—on Mydei's shoulders, his back, pulling him closer as if to reassure himself that this was real. Mydei, equally lost in the heat of the moment, responded in kind, his fingers tangling in Phainon's hair, tugging him deeper into the kiss.

There was no slowing down now. Every touch, every movement seemed to push them further, the tension that had simmered between them for so long exploded, leaving them both breathless and wanting more.

Phainon broke the kiss, his forehead resting against Mydei's as they both gasped for air. His hands moved to the hem of Mydei's clothes, or at least the very few things he actually had on, fingers brushing against the surprisingly warm skin, and for a moment, they hesitated—an unspoken question passing between them. But Mydei was the one to close the distance, his mouth claiming Phainon's again, pushing him back against the cold stone of the temple wall.

As they pressed against each other, the weight of their armor felt like nothing, too cumbersome to hold them back. Mydei's hands moved with purpose, undoing straps, pulling fabric away, and Phainon didn't stop him. There was no more room for doubt, no time to question the choices they were making. They were beyond that now.

Before the kiss could deepen, Phainon pulled back, his chest rising and falling with each heavy breath. His hands hovered at Mydei's waist, unsure for a split second before settling there. His gaze flickered between Mydei's eyes and his lips, trying to steady himself.

"I want this… to be good for you," Phainon said, his voice rough but genuine, the words spilling out before he could second-guess them. "Let me make it right, Mydei. Let me—" He paused, the moment stretching longer than it should. There was a flicker of hesitation in his eyes, a quiet vulnerability, but when he spoke again, his voice was steadier, more assured. "I want you to feel… everything."

He wasn't entirely sure what he was asking, or how Mydei would take it, but there was no turning back now. His hands slid a little lower, his fingers brushing against Mydei's skin with a tenderness that contradicted the fire building inside him. "Trust me," he added, his voice almost a whisper, as he waited for Mydei's response.

Mydei's eyes softened for a split second, and his lips curled into a small, unusual smile. He could feel the tension in Phainon's voice, the hint of uncertainty, but it only made him want to pull closer.

“Good?” Mydei repeated, his voice dropping low, heavy with intent. “I don’t need you to be perfect, Phainon.” He paused, his hand reaching up to touch Phainon’s jaw, a gentle caress that betrayed his usual sharpness. “Just… be here with me.” His eyes soften slightly, and he leaned in close, brushing his lips against Phainon’s ear. “I trust you to make it more than enough.”

And with that, they continued. This time, when Phainon initiated the kiss, it was soft—tentative, as if testing the waters. But soon, his touch grew firmer, more certain. His lips pressed against Mydei’s with increasing urgency, the initial hesitation fading as his hands pulled Mydei closer, deepening the kiss with a quiet intensity.

“You said my name.” Phainon murmured as his grip on the other’s waist tightened. Moving forward, he changed their position as he gently pinned the other to the wall, slowly tracing his lips down from the other’s face to his neck, leaving a trail of marks on his way, a silent claim.

Phainon’s lips traveled lower, tracing a path down Mydei’s neck, lingering just above his collarbone before moving toward his chest. His hands slid around Mydei’s waist, pulling him closer as his lips found one of Mydei’s nipples, teasing it with a gentle, deliberate pressure.

Mydei’s breath caught, a sharp gasp escaping his lips. His body tensed, the sensation both unexpected and electrifying, his fingers digging into Phainon’s shoulders as he tilted his head back, his chest rising and falling with the intensity of his breath.

“Phainon…” Mydei murmured, his voice laced with a mix of surprise and desire. His grip tightened, as if trying to ground himself, but his body betrayed him, pulling Phainon closer as a shiver ran through him. “Damn you…”

That was all Mydei managed to say before Phainon bit down, his teeth sinking into the sensitive skin just above Mydei’s collarbone. The sharp sting ignited a spark of heat that coursed through him, and a strangled, broken sound escaped his throat—something between a gasp and a moan.

Phainon's grip tightened on Mydei's waist as his tongue soothed the mark he'd just left, his lips lingering as if to claim that spot for himself. His mouth moved lower, dragging over Mydei's chest, his teeth grazing over one nipple before he closed his lips around it, sucking hard enough to leave a bruise.

"Hnngh—Phainon!" Mydei's voice cracked, his head falling back against the wall with a dull thud. His nails scraped down Phainon's back with such force that he knew he'd drawn blood, the sting beneath his fingertips only fueling his growing need.

Phainon didn't falter. If anything, the sharpness of Mydei's reactions spurred him on. He bit down again, this time just beneath Mydei's ribcage, his lips curling into a faint smile as Mydei's body arched into him. Every gasp, every shiver, every ragged sound that escaped Mydei only drove Phainon to push further, to explore every part of him until there was no question who had control of this moment.

Without giving Mydei a chance to reply, Phainon's lips descended again, this time lower, tracing the sharp lines of his abdomen. His hands slid beneath the other's pants, tugging just enough to expose his cock. Mydei's breath hitched, his head falling back against the wall as his body tensed under the sensation.

"Phainon—" Mydei started, but the word dissolved into a sharp inhale as Phainon's mouth found its way onto it, sinking to his knees, his teeth grazing, his tongue following to soothe the sting. Mydei's legs threatened to give out, and his hands gripped the back of the wall with enough force to leave a dent to steady himself, his composure unraveling with every move.

He hesitated only for a moment, his gaze flicking up to meet Mydei's, searching for any trace of doubt. But Mydei's smirk was back, sharp and unapologetic, his voice dripping with provocation.

"Don't tell me you're second-guessing yourself now, Deliverer."

Phainon’s lips curled into a faint, almost defiant smile, as if to say Hardl y. His hands pressed against Mydei’s thighs, firm and grounding, as he leaned in once, his breath warm against the sensitive skin.

The first touch of his mouth was deliberate—a slow, teasing drag of his tongue that made Mydei’s breath hitch, though he refused to give Phainon the satisfaction of a sound. That resistance only spurred Phainon on. He took him deeper, his lips wrapping around the length with practiced precision, his movements slow at first, testing Mydei’s reactions.

But as Mydei’s fingers tangled in his hair, tugging him closer with increasing insistence, Phainon obliged. He took him deeper, pushing past his own limits, his throat constricting as he swallowed him fully, the sensation sending a shudder through both of them.

“Hngh—” Mydei’s head fell back against the wall, his breath ragged, but the words that left his mouth were anything but vulnerable. “Is that all you’ve got?”

The challenge was unmistakable, laced with both amusement and heat. Mydei’s grip on Phainon’s hair tightened, pulling him forward as if to test him further. Phainon didn’t falter. He only redoubled his efforts, his movements growing bolder, more relentless, he was going to silence that mocking tone once and for all.

While Phainon was focused on drawing Mydei to the edge, determined to take his time and make the moment last, Mydei had other ideas. A low growl escaped his lips, his patience finally snapping as he roughly grabbed Phainon’s hair, the sudden tug forcing him off with little ceremony.

Phainon gasped, the sharp sting in his scalp momentarily distracting him as he looked up at Mydei, surprise flashing in his eyes. “What’s wrong—” he started, his voice hoarse, but the words barely left his mouth before Mydei yanked him back down, his grip unrelenting.

The suddenness of it forced Phainon to take him in deeper than before, a choked sound escaping his throat as he struggled to adjust. He barely managed to steady himself before Mydei began to move, his hips snapping forward with a ferocity that left no room for hesitation. Phainon's hands shot up to brace against Mydei's thighs, his nails digging into the firm muscle as he struggled to keep up with the brutal pace.

Each thrust sent shockwaves through him, his throat constricting as Mydei drove into him relentlessly. Tears welled at the corners of his eyes, spilling over with every desperate gasp, while drool pooled at the corners of his mouth, dripping down his chin. The wet, obscene sounds filled the temple's chamber, mingling with the ragged rhythm of their breathing.

Mydei's voice cut through the haze, rough and commanding. "Don't hold back now, Deliverer. You wanted to prove yourself—so take it."

The words sent a jolt through Phainon, his blood going south at the provocation even as his body struggled to keep up. Mydei's grip tightened in his hair, his movements relentless, forcing Phainon to surrender completely to the raw intensity.

Phainon could feel his control slipping with each brutal thrust. His throat burned, his chest heaved for air, and yet, he refused to pull away. Every gasping breath, every tear slipping down his flushed cheeks only seemed to spur Mydei further. The temple's air felt heavier, charged with the weight of their shared desire, the glyphs faintly pulsing in time with Mydei's movements—as though even the ancient walls bore witness to their descent into raw need.

A low, guttural sound escaped Mydei's lips, his head tilting back as his grip in Phainon's hair tightened even further. "Hngh… You're… taking this better than I thought," he muttered, though his tone was strained now, his breath uneven. Phainon barely registered the words, too focused on holding himself steady, determined to meet Mydei's every demand.

And then Mydei's body tensed, his thrusts growing erratic, sharper, each movement sending jolts through Phainon that left him breathless. "Phainon," Mydei groaned, his voice rough and fractured as he finally reached his limit.

The prince’s release came with a shuddering groan, his body trembling as he spilled into Phainon’s throat, his grip tightening one last time before finally loosening. Phainon stayed in place, swallowing through the heat and strain, his chest heaving as he fought to catch his breath.

Phainon fullycollapsed back onto his knees, his chest heaving as he wiped at his chin with the back of his hand, his lips swollen and raw. His mind swam in the haze of everything that had just happened, his throat still burning, but he didn’t regret a second of it.

When he finally glanced up, Mydei was staring down at him, a satisfied smirk tugging at his lips. “Not bad,” the prince said, his voice low and still laced with that familiar edge. “But you’re not done yet, are you?”

Phainon let out a breathless laugh, tilting his head slightly, his hair clinging to his sweat-dampened skin. “After that? You’re insatiable,” he rasped, his voice hoarse but teasing. “You really don’t know when to stop, do you?”

Mydei’s smirk only deepened as he crouched down, his hand gripping Phainon’s chin to tilt his face upward. “And yet, you’re still here,” he said, his tone soft but no less ridiculing. “So, tell me, Snowy—do you want me to stop?” Mydei’s use of the nickname was meant to be insulting, but he couldn’t help but find it almost adorable.

Phainon’s response was immediate, his lips curling into a faint smile despite the exhaustion in his eyes. “Not even a little.”

His hands slid to caress Mydei’s, “You’ve been so eager,” he murmured, his voice filled with thinly veiled adoration as he held Mydei’s hands to his cheek, “but it’s your turn now. Make it count.”

Phainon’s pulse raced as he pulled back slightly, meeting Mydei’s eyes with an almost predatory look of his own. “Open,” he commanded softly, his tone making it clear there was no room for refusal.

Without a word, Mydei complied, his lips parting as he gazed up at Phainon, his breath shallow. Phainon’s finger came up, and Mydei’s mouth opened willingly, taking the them into his mouth with a faint, almost possessive hum. His tongue swirled around it, wetting it thoroughly, as he made eye contact with Phainon—defiant, yet willing, an undeniable need beneath him.

Mydei obeyed, his lips tightening around the finger, sucking eagerly as his eyes never broke from Phainon’s. The heat of his mouth sent a thrill down Phainon’s spine, making his grip on Mydei’s hip tighten, his fingers flexing as the urge to claim him grew stronger.

After a few moments, Phainon slowly withdrew his finger, slick with Mydei’s saliva, and moved it down to the other’s hole. Mydei’s breath hitched at the first touch, his body already responding before Phainon even pushed in. The combination of anticipation and the friction of his slickened finger made Phainon shudder as he began to press gently, testing the warmth and tightness.

Phainon’s fingers continued their slow, gentle exploration, sliding in and out with careful precision, his other hand braced against Mydei’s body as he leaned down to kiss his chest, his lips worshiping every inch of skin he could reach. Mydei’s breath hitched with each careful movement, his jaw clenched as Phainon’s fingers slowly stretched him, making sure to be deliberate, not rushing.

“You feel so good around my fingers,” Phainon whispered, his voice low and warm, breath hot against Mydei’s skin. He slowly worked a second finger inside, pushing deeper, stretching him slowly, every motion designed to prepare him, to build the pressure. “So tight, so fucking perfect.”

Mydei’s breath stuttered, and despite himself, he let out a low, soft groan, his body tightening in response to the stretch. His hand shot up, gripping Phainon’s wrist with surprising force, as if trying to stop him for a moment, but his grip was more out of control than he’d intended. “Don’t—you don’t need to… take it slow.” he muttered, though the words came out strained, a bit more vulnerable than he had meant.

Phainon noticed the shift, his lips curling into a faint smile as he gently twisted his fingers inside, adding pressure, then slowly pulling back. He whispered, his voice almost reverent, “How are you feeling, Mydei? You still with me?”

The question seemed almost rhetorical, but there was something in Phainon’s voice—something that urged Mydei to answer, even though the prince wasn’t one to offer too much vulnerability. Still, Mydei’s response was a low moan, his teeth clenching. “I’m fine. Keep going.”

Phainon didn’t wait for any more words, his lips pressing to Mydei’s neck as he slowly began to move his fingers again, stretching him further, getting him used to the sensation. He pushed his fingers in and out gently, savoring the way Mydei’s body reacted, feeling the heat building with each subtle movement.

But then, something in Mydei snapped. The building tension, the slow, calculated stretch—he wanted more. He wanted all of Phainon. Without warning, Mydei bucked against Phainon’s fingers, his hand snapping down to grab Phainon’s wrist again, forceful this time, pulling Phainon closer, wanting more. “Enough,” Mydei growled, the restraint finally breaking, his voice laced with frustration and desire. “Take me. Now.”

Phainon’s fingers worked in and out of Mydei with deliberate force, each stroke pushing further, deeper, a rough stretch that had Mydei squirming beneath him. The pace was faster now, more urgent, but still controlled, his fingers driving into him with a ferocity that matched the rising tension between them. Mydei’s body bucked against the force of each thrust, the heat between them intensifying as Phainon leaned in close, his breath hot against Mydei’s neck.

“Not yet,” Phainon muttered, his voice thick with desire but still holding an edge of restraint. His thumb brushed against Mydei’s sensitive skin, teasing as he slid his fingers in and out again, stretching him further. “You need more time. I’ll make it good for you, but I want to make sure you’re ready.”

Mydei’s breathing was ragged, his body trembling beneath Phainon’s touch, his hands fisting the stone floor as he tried to push back against the force of the fingers inside him. He wanted more, wanted Phainon to take him completely, but Phainon held him in place, his grip firm on Mydei's hips, not allowing him to move any faster than Phainon was willing to go.

"Phainon," Mydei growled, his voice low and strained. "Please, don't tease me. Just fucking do it already."

But Phainon only smirked, leaning down to press a kiss to Mydei's shoulder, the gesture almost tender before he whispered, "Patience, Mydei. I'll make sure you feel it all."

The rough thrusts continued, Phainon's fingers pushing deeper, stretching Mydei further than before, each motion building more pressure, more heat. He could feel Mydei's muscles tighten around him, his body tensing with the strain, but Phainon refused to relent. He wasn't going to rush this. Not when he could see the way Mydei's body was reacting—how he was so close to unraveling but just needed that little bit more.

"Feel that?" Phainon asked, his voice breathy and low, filled with a raw kind of satisfaction. "So tight for me… just the way I like it."

Mydei's teeth clenched as his body arched in response to the teasing, but Phainon wasn't about to give in just yet. His fingers curled inside, rubbing against Mydei's walls as he stretched him even further, the steady rhythm keeping the prince on edge, building him up until he could hardly breathe for the desire coursing through him.

"Not yet, Mydei," Phainon repeated, his voice thick with restraint. "I'm going to make you feel every second of this."

By now Phainon was practically holding Mydei up, the prince straddling his hips while Phainon pinned him against the wall. Mydei's back was pressed to the stone, his chest heaving with each breath as Phainon kept him in place, his hands gripping Mydei's hips hard enough to bruise.

Originally, Mydei had been facing the other way, his back to Phainon, but Phainon had other plans. He wanted to see every inch of Mydei as he fucked him, so he flipped him around without hesitation, forcing him into a new position where Phainon had more control.

The change was sudden, rough, and Mydei wasn't expecting it. He opened his mouth to protest but was cut off as Phainon's hands grabbed him, pulling him down onto his lap. Mydei's legs trembled slightly from the change, but Phainon wasn't concerned about that.

"Better this way," Phainon muttered, his hands moving to Mydei's ass, spreading him open with no more hesitation than if it were an obvious thing. "Wanted to see that face while I fuck you."

Phainon's sudden shift in demeanor wasn't lost on Mydei. One moment, Phainon was careful, almost reverent in his touch, stretching him out slowly with careful praise. The next, the change was unmistakable—Phainon's hands were rougher, his voice less composed, more desperate, and Mydei couldn't help but feel the contrast, the way it made his body burn even hotter.

"You've been so good for me, Mydei," Phainon said, the words practically dripping from his lips as he spread Mydei wider, the roughness of his grip a stark contrast to the gentle preparation moments before. "You've taken everything I've given you. Now, I get to take what I want."

The words hit harder than they should have. Mydei's pulse spiked, his body tightening with anticipation, the raw edge in Phainon's voice lighting a fire deep in his gut. He wanted to respond, wanted to push back, but Phainon wasn't giving him the chance. Before Mydei could fully process it, Phainon's cock was at his entrance, the thick head teasing him for a moment before Phainon pushed inside with one swift, punishing thrust.

Mydei's body arched as the stretch hit him in a way that had his breath catching in his throat. Phainon's grip tightened, holding him firmly in place as he bottomed out in one rough push, Mydei's body shaking from the force.

"Fucking Hell," Phainon muttered under his breath, the words filled with morbid satisfaction. He didn't wait for Mydei to adjust; he just started moving, pulling out and slamming back into him, each thrust deeper and harder than the last. The force of it had Mydei gasping, his hands clinging to Phainon's shoulders as he was rocked forward again and again, the sting of pain quickly blending with pleasure as the rhythm picked up.

Mydei's breath hitched with each stroke, his body jerking forward, the overwhelming sensation building in him with every thrust. The feeling of Phainon's cock stretching him open, pushing deeper, was too much—his head fell back against the wall, his neck exposed as he let out a strangled moan.

"Fuck, Phainon," Mydei groaned, his legs trembling, the words slipping out before he could stop them. The intense pleasure flooded through him, a wave of heat coiling tighter with each deep thrust. "God… you feel so good."

Phainon didn't answer. He didn't need to. The slap of skin on skin, the wet, filthy sounds of their bodies meeting filled the room, the sound of their pleasure mingling in the air. Phainon's hands gripped Mydei's hips harder, forcing him into each stroke, the rough pace never letting up as he pushed Mydei to the edge with every thrust.

Phainon's hands never stopped moving, holding Mydei steady as he thrust in and out with force, each movement harder and deeper than the last. He could feel the way Mydei's body tightened, his muscles clenching with every thrust, the heat between them making every inch of movement more intoxicating. The sound of their bodies colliding echoed through the temple, filling the air with a primal rhythm.

Phainon's grip on Mydei's hips tightened as he angled himself to hit that perfect spot, the one that made Mydei's breath catch in his throat. He didn't care about anything else now but the feeling of Mydei wrapped around him, the way his body responded to every thrust, every pull.

"You feel so good," Phainon repeated, his voice low and filled with admiration as his hips slapped against Mydei's. "Even the Gods would be envious of you."

Mydei’s body jolted with each deep thrust, his back arching, the movement almost involuntary now. His hands fisted against the stone as Phainon drove into him relentlessly, each stroke pushing him closer to the edge. The deep admiration in Phainon’s voice sent a shiver down his spine, the combination of praise and roughness igniting a fire within him. His breath came out in sharp pants, his own mind slipping further as he gave in to the relentless rhythm of Phainon’s thrusts.

Phainon’s lips brushed against Mydei’s ear, his voice dark with desire. “So perfect,” he whispered, each word heavy with longing. “You’re everything I’ve ever dreamed of. So tight, so beautiful.”

Every word, every touch, every thrust felt like an offering. The intensity of Phainon’s adoration fueled Mydei’s desire, his own body responding to the rough, unrelenting pace. His chest heaved with each ragged breath, his moans turning into near-silent gasps as he felt himself slipping closer to the edge.

Phainon didn’t relent, moving with a rhythm that was as brutal as it was beautiful. The sound of skin slapping against skin filled the room, each movement deeper, harder, and more driven than the last. Phainon’s hands gripped Mydei’s hips like a lifeline, pulling him in, owning him in every way.

“You’re incredible,” Phainon rasped, his voice thick with lust. “There’s nothing like you.”

Mydei’s body was trembling, every inch of him responding to the deep, relentless pounding, his own mind caught in the haze of pleasure and overstimulation. The feeling of Phainon inside him was overwhelming—he was stretched to his limit, every thrust hitting harder and deeper, making it impossible to focus on anything but the intensity of what they were sharing. Each thrust brought him closer to the edge, and he could feel himself unraveling, but still, Phainon kept pushing him further, his body responding even as he struggled to keep up with the pace.

I’m so close… don’t stop.”

But Phainon only increased the pressure, his hands firm on Mydei’s hips as he drove into him, harder, faster. Mydei’s breath hitched again, his back arching uncontrollably as the pleasure overwhelmed him, his entire body tense with need. The rhythm faltered just slightly as he fought to maintain control, his own release building to a near unbearable point. But Phainon, relentless as ever, refused to let up.

Suddenly, Phainon’s hand was at his neck, his breath hot against Mydei’s skin as he leaned in, his voice low and possessive. “Look at me,” Phainon whispered in the crook of Mydei’s neck, his words filled with that same worshipful intensity. “You look so beautiful right now. I want to see you, Mydei. I want to watch you when you come. Don’t hide from me.”

The words were like fire in Mydei’s veins. His body responded immediately, his head falling back as he finally gave in to the sensation, pushing himself up to meet Phainon’s every thrust, every deep stroke that left him gasping. The sound of his breath was ragged, almost strangled, as he found himself close to the edge, unable to hold back much longer.

Phainon’s hands were on his hips, his grip unyielding, but Mydei could barely think anymore, only feeling. “Please, Phainon, don’t stop. I can’t—” His words faltered as Phainon hit a spot inside him that made him see stars, and his whole body tensed in response.

Phainon’s thrusts never slowed, and as Mydei neared the brink, he could feel the tension building inside him, like a coil that was ready to snap. “I know you can’t,” Phainon murmured, his voice breathy and urgent. “I’m right here. Don’t worry, Mydei. Just let go.”

The words were the final push. Mydei’s back arched sharply, his whole body stiffening as the white-hot release of pleasure coursed through him. His moans were almost a scream as his body clenched around Phainon, every nerve lighting up in overdrive. His release was intense—unrelenting, like nothing else—and the overwhelming feeling made his muscles tighten, his body trembling beneath Phainon’s steady thrusts.

Phainon, sensing the change, pushed deeper, his own release nearing. “That’s it, Mydei,” Phainon whispered hoarsely, his voice barely above a rasp. “That’s perfect.”

With that final thrust, Phainon let go too. His body tensed as he buried himself deep, his own orgasm hitting him like a wave of fire. He felt Mydei clench around him, the sudden tightening making him see stars as his own release flooded through him, deep and overwhelming.

As the last tremors of their release subsided, Phainon stayed close, his breath still ragged, his hands gently caressing Mydei’s hips as he eased out. He could feel Mydei’s body still shuddering beneath him, his muscles twitching from the intensity of it all. Phainon’s eyes softened, looking down at him with an expression that was far more tender than anything they’d shared before.

“Are you okay?” Phainon whispered, his voice low and warm, his thumb brushing over the sweat-slicked skin of Mydei’s side. “You did so well.”

Mydei’s chest heaved as he caught his breath, his eyes still closed as he tried to steady himself, the overwhelming pleasure still making his body tremble. He let out a shaky breath, his voice rough as he spoke. “You’re… incredible,” he murmured, his words slow but genuine.

Phainon smiled softly, leaning in to press a gentle kiss to Mydei’s temple. “I just wanted to make sure you felt it… everything,” he whispered, his voice filled with devotion. “You’re amazing, Mydei.”

Mydei shifted slightly, looking up at Phainon through half-lidded eyes, his expression softening as he reached out to touch Phainon’s arm. He didn’t say anything in return, but his fingers lingered there, a quiet acknowledgment of the moment. The intensity of their connection was still palpable, but now there was a calm settling over them, something that was both grounding and intimate.

Phainon leaned back slightly, letting Mydei relax against him. His heart was still racing, but the exhaustion from their shared release wrapped them both in a comfortable silence, the kind that only came after such an overwhelming experience.

“Mydei,” Phainon murmured, his voice gentle, “I’m glad I’m with you.”

They lay there for a few moments, the air between them heavy with the aftermath of everything that had just transpired. The sounds of their breathing were the only thing that filled the silence, but neither of them seemed in a rush to break it. Mydei shifted slightly, his hand resting lightly on Phainon’s chest as he looked up at him with a quiet intensity, something raw in his gaze that wasn’t there before.

“You don’t have to say anything,” Mydei muttered, his voice quieter now, the usual sharpness replaced with something softer. His thumb traced circles over Phainon’s skin, as if grounding himself after the storm they had just weathered together. “But I… I don’t think I’ve ever felt like this before.”

Phainon’s heart skipped at the words, the weight of them heavier than anything physical. He wanted to say something, anything, to reassure Mydei, but instead, he just pulled him closer. His hand cupped the back of Mydei’s neck, gently guiding him to look up at him, his thumb brushing over Mydei’s jawline.

“You don’t have to either,” Phainon whispered, his voice a mix of understanding and sincerity. “I just… I wanted to make you feel everything you deserve.” ( Mydei deserved so much more than he was ever given. The city never accepted him or his people. His name was spoken with fear, his people with disgust. Phainon often wondered how he could endure it all—how he didn’t resent the very city he protected. All the sacrifice, the devotion, in return for nothing but hatred. It was hard to imagine how Mydei stayed as calm as he did, how he remained as composed when so many others would have snapped under the weight of it.)

Mydei’s lips twitched into the faintest of smiles, and for a moment, there was a softness in his eyes that Phainon had never seen before. “I felt it,” Mydei whispered back, his voice barely audible but carrying more weight than any proclamation could. “More than I ever have.” This was unusually honest of the prince, more vulnerable than he’d ever been.

Phainon leaned down slowly, their lips meeting in a soft, tender kiss. It wasn't hungry or desperate like before, but full of something deeper, a connection they'd never fully expressed before. It was gentle, explorative, like they were savoring the moment, letting their emotions speak louder than words.

When they finally pulled away, Phainon rested his forehead against Mydei's, their breaths still slow and in sync. "I don't know what this is, but I'm not letting it go," Phainon said quietly, almost to himself, though loud enough for Mydei to hear.

Mydei didn't answer immediately, but his fingers brushed through Phainon's hair, his grip gentle. After a long beat, he finally responded with a quiet murmur, "Neither am I."

As Phainon lay there, the weight of their shared intimacy still hanging in the air between them, his thoughts drifted. The rush of everything they'd just experienced was still fresh in his mind, but the reality of their situation —the Followers of Strife—hadn't gone away. They were still stuck in this forgotten temple, isolated from the rest of the world, with enemies closing in on them.

He shifted slightly, breaking the comfortable silence, and glanced over at Mydei, whose eyes were closed for a moment, just resting, still processing everything. The tension from the fight earlier seemed to hang in the back of Phainon's mind, creeping back in as his thoughts refocused on the mission at hand.

His gaze wandered to the entrance of the temple, where the sound of distant footsteps—if the Followers of Strife hadn't doubled back—kept him on edge. He'd rushed into this situation, thinking they could hold out long enough for help to arrive. But now, as the calm of the moment gave way to logic, Phainon couldn't help but feel the weight of the poor decision he'd made.

(Mydei had been right, hadn't he?) The thought tugged at him, a mix of pride and frustration. He'd wanted to act quickly, to take control, but Mydei's constant warning about not rushing headlong into danger echoed in his mind. This wasn’t the plan he’d envisioned, and it wasn’t one of his best ideas. He’d been blinded by the adrenaline, by the need to keep fighting, without considering the consequences.

Phainon shifted to sit up, brushing a hand through his hair as the weight of their situation hit him with full force. “I think you were right, Mydei,” he admitted softly, looking over at him with a sheepish grin, trying to mask the slight tension in his voice. “This wasn’t one of my best ideas.”

Mydei’s eyes opened, the sharpness still there in his gaze, but there was a flicker of something softer when he heard Phainon’s admission. “You don’t have to tell me,” he said dryly, though there was no malice in his words. “But I’m glad you’re seeing it now.”

Phainon chuckled softly, shaking his head. “Yeah, well, at least we’re alive for now. We just need a plan.”

Phainon was still running through potential solutions, his mind tangled with half-formed ideas, when Mydei finally broke the silence. His voice was calm, deliberate—far from his usual playful tone.

“Before we left the city,” Mydei began, his gaze fixed on the temple’s glyph-covered walls, “I interrogated one of the priests from the Followers. He mentioned this temple specifically, said there were escape routes built into its foundation.” He paused, his eyes narrowing slightly. “I didn’t think it was relevant at the time. Figured it was just another lie to save his own skin. But now…” He trailed off, his expression thoughtful, almost grim. “It might be the only way out of here.”

Phainon blinked, the weight of Mydei’s words slowly settling in. He exhaled, relief washing over him like a wave. “Thank the stars,” he murmured, glancing at Mydei with a faint smile. “I was starting to think we’d be stuck here for good.”

Mydei didn’t respond right away, his expression unreadable. Phainon took that as his cue to move. He grabbed his discarded clothes, shaking off the tension that had coiled in his chest during the fight. His hands moved quickly, buttoning his tunic as his mind shifted to action. “Alright,” he said, his voice steady as he pulled his belt back into place. “Let’s find this escape route and—”

He didn’t get to finish the sentence.

There was no warning, no hesitation—just a firm grip on Phainon’s thighs as Mydei stepped forward and unceremoniously threw one of his legs over his shoulder. Phainon barely had time to react before his back hit the ground, the air knocked from his lungs as Mydei bent down, his lips pressing firmly to the sensitive skin of Phainon’s inner thigh.

“Mydei—” Phainon’s words faltered as Mydei bit down, his teeth dragging over the tender flesh, leaving marks with every deliberate motion. Phainon’s breath hitched, his hands instinctively gripping Mydei’s shoulders for balance as a wave of heat coursed through him.

“You didn’t really think we were done, did you?” Mydei said, his voice low and steady, with a sharp edge that left no room for argument. His hands gripped Phainon’s hips tightly, holding him in place as his mouth continued its deliberate path across his thigh.

“Let me repay you,” Mydei added, his voice rougher now, his fingers already tugging at the fastenings of Phainon’s pants he’d been able to throw back on somehow before being grabbed. “Properly this time.”

Phainon opened his mouth to reply, but nothing came out. His thoughts dissolved into a heated haze as Mydei’s lips trailed lower, his body pressed firmly against him.

Stars above, that’s hot, Phainon thought, his heart racing as Mydei’s grip tightened, pulling him into something he wasn’t sure he could resist—or wanted to.

Phainon’s pulse raced as Mydei’s hands moved with practiced precision, pulling him in closer, as though to claim him all over again. Mydei’s eyes met his, the heat in them unmistakable, and Phainon found himself breathless, his body already reacting before his mind had fully caught up.

“You’re still hard,” Mydei murmured, his voice dark and teasing. The smirk on his lips was both commanding and knowing, as if he knew exactly what Phainon needed.

Phainon blinked, caught off guard by how quickly his body had responded, but he couldn’t deny it. “You… you’re not exactly helping,” he muttered, though his breath was already shallow, his hands instinctively moving to grab Mydei, to pull him closer.

Mydei chuckled softly, a sound full of quiet, sinful promise. “Good,” he said, his grip tightening around Phainon’s waist. “It’s your turn to give in.”

Phainon’s heart raced as he let himself fall further into the moment, his control slipping, just as it had with Mydei’s every action. He didn’t want to resist anymore. He didn’t need to.

With that final thought, the rest was history—one more step toward losing himself to Mydei in every sense.

End Notes

This was actually my first smut fic, I hope it was enjoyable at the very least, these 2 have had my heart even before Amphoreus came out, so I'm happy they're getting more attention!

I'm debating a chapter 2 with Mydei going down on Phainon, but depending on the reception this fic receives, and if I have the energy, I might. (Say, IF I do, then would u guys like just a direct continuation of it or a timeskip a few weeks later so they actually get a bed or something else?)

Anyway, thank you for sticking around and reading!!!
